

In 1974, it was made illegal to park on the pavement at all in London, but not the rest of the UK. While the Highway Code advises against parking on the pavement, it's not against the law outside of the capital – unless a police officer judges it to be dangerous

This can be reported to 101 with name of the road and car registration numbers - especially if it causing a dangerous situation.

We ask all residents to park with consideration to other members of the community.
